EDITOR'S INTRODUCTION—

Our panels include alumni from the early 50's to recent graduates and two professors known to many alumni. May I introduce them to you—Dr. Richard Cornelius '55, who beyond his student years has had eighteen years of service as an English professor; Karin deRosset '64, a second generation graduate who is now dean of women; Walter Jensen: I have sensed God's will that this is where I am to be and is being transferred to the counseling office; and David Wright '74, our youngest panelist who has completed two years on our library staff. The two honorary alumni that are both entering their twenty-fifth year of teaching at Bryan are Dr. John Anderson, professor of ancient languages, and Dr. Irving Jensen, professor of Bible.

Realizing that alumni are always wondering how Bryan compares today with the school they remember, I have asked several alumni here at the college and two other faculty members who are known to many alumni to share with you their views about the changes at Bryan, the present strengths, and future hopes for the school.

Let's introduce our discussion with this basic question for our panelists:

Why do you choose to continue your association at Bryan?

Jensen: I have sensed God's will that this is where I should be serving in the vineyard.

Seera: I want to have a part in making available to as many young people as possible the same Christian higher educational possibilities as my children and their spouses had. I believe that Bryan continues upon a solid Biblical position that is well-integrated with a top-quality educational philosophy manifested in a program that neither deters from God's Word, nor is forced into a denominational frame of doctrine, nor does it base its existence upon the popularity of any human individual or media gimmickry.

Cornelius: I recognize the Lord's leading and believe the Lord is blessing and using the school as a balanced Christian liberal arts institution. In addition there are pleasant people and surroundings, a beautiful location, and challenging and rewarding work.

Anderson: Service at Bryan College is very rewarding in that one's ministry is extended and multiplied through students. The spiritual commitment of the college is in accord with my own commitment to Christ. The Word of God is the basis for all action. Even after 24 years of service, I can say that it is a pleasure to teach at such an institution.

Froemke: Young men and women face much greater expectations and the majority of the people involved plan for seminary training and the ministry.

deRosset: Educationally I'm very impressed with the Biblical emphasis of the college remains unchanged. The added dimension of the spiritual emphasis in a liberal arts education has not been diminished either. The faculty are committed to an integration of faith and learning.

Anderson: The Biblical emphasis of the college remains the same. It is still committed to the inspired, inerrant Word of God. Bryan remains true to its motto, "Christ Above All." It also continues to stress academic excellence.

Seera: We continue to have required chapel for all full-time students and required Bible courses regardless of major interest. We maintain strictness in employing only born-again faculty and administrators.

Are there traditions and philosophies which continue unchanged?

Wright: The idea of a liberal arts education has not changed. The added dimension of the spiritual emphasis in a liberal arts education has not been diminished either. The faculty are committed to an integration of faith and learning.

Anderson: The Biblical emphasis of the college remains the same. It is still committed to the inspired, inerrant Word of God. Bryan remains true to its motto, "Christ Above All." It also continues to stress academic excellence.

Seera: We continue to have required chapel for all full-time students and required Bible courses regardless of major interest. We maintain strictness in employing only born-again faculty and administrators.

Are there some things that are being changed or developed for the future?

Froemke: I observe more emphasis on career development and am glad for plans for physical expansion of the library, cafeteria, and dormitory space.

Cornelius: Options for English majors in addition to the traditional literature emphasis now include writing, speech-drama, and Christian Education.

Wright: It is encouraging to see the plans for a new dormitory and for a library building taking shape.

Seera: I am impressed by the initiative on the part of the faculty members to seek new avenues of educational expansion such as working toward a more complete
The unity of the college is better now than before. Majors have been strengthened. An increased student body is evidence of commitment to Christ. The college is better now than before.
